3 GUILTY OF KILLING A DETECTIVE ON IRT

Three youths were convicted early yesterday in Brooklyn Supreme Court of killing a city detective in a subway train. The jury, which deliberated 11 hours, was unable to agree about a fourth defendant.

Detective Donald Rolker, who was 42 years old, was the only passenger in the rear car of an IRT subway train when it pulled into Flatbush Avenue last Nov. 27. Four youths held him up. He shot one of three assailants, but they returned his fire, killing him instantly. They were captured when they tried to commandeer a taxi.

First-degree murder verdicts were returned against Alan McNeil, 19, and his brother, Henry, 17, both of 192 Sands Street, and Charles Spain, 17, of 443 Bristol Street, all Brooklyn. The jury was unable to reach a verdict on Steve Moore, 16, also of 192 Sands Street.

Justice David L. Malbin, who presided at the trial, directed the jury to return Monday to decide whether Alan McNeil, who was wounded in the holdup, should go to the electric chair. His younger accomplices will get mandatory life sentences because they are under 18. Moore was remanded pending a new trial.
