PAROLE BAN URGED IN MURDER CASES

A Brooklyn judge and a prosecutor urged the State Legislature yesterday to enact a law prohibiting the parole of persons serving life sentences for murder.

State Supreme Court Justice David L. Malbin and Chief Assistant District Attorney Aaron E. Koota called upon citizens to demand a tightening of the criminal code so that life-termers could never be freed.

The views were expressed in Brooklyn Supreme Court when four defendants went before Justice Malbin for sentencing.

The Justice gave life terms to Allen McNeil, 19 years old, and his brother, Henry Eugene McNeil, 17, both of 192 Sands Street, and Charles Spain, 17, of 443 Bristol Street, all of Brooklyn. They were accused of the hold-up slaying of Detective Donald Rolker, 42, in an IRT subway train last Nov. 27. They were convicted May 13.

Justice Malbin gave a 30-year-to-life sentence to Louis J. Lupi, 18, of 938 Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn. He had pleaded guilty May 18 to a second-degree murder charge in the killing of Solomon Eisenstein, a 56-year-old cab driver, during a holdup in Brooklyn last Oct. 23.

The Justice said that "if citizens want convicted killers permanently off the streets," they should ask for legislative action.

The New York Times
Published: June 25, 1964
Copyright © The New York Times