A New Jersey man already accused of berating an Asian-American NYPD detective with racial slurs last year has posted a new video to social media saying he can't wait to cause mayhem at the next police funeral, according to a police union.

Detectives' Endowment Association President Paul DiGiacomo said in a release that the alleged threats by Terrell Harper "must be taken seriously." The union honcho asked federal prosecutors to investigate.

In the video, Harper laments he didn't know about the funeral last week for Officer Jason Rivera, who was shot dead responding to a domestic incident.

"I'm looking for the next cop funeral. ... Son that's going to be my new threat to them," Harper says in the video widely circulating on social media. "I can't wait for one y'all to die so I can f--- your funeral up."

The Daily News obtained a copy of the video.

Last year, the detectives' union accused Harper in a civil lawsuit of launching an offensive tirade against a Chinese-American cop, Detective Vincent Cheung, during a demonstration near the Stonewall Inn.

Harper, of Neptune, N.J., has argued in court filings that his "political monologue" was protected by the First Amendment. His lawyer Remy Green declined to respond to the union's new release.

Rivera's partner, Wilbert Mora, will be mourned at a funeral Wednesday at St. Patrick's Cathedral. The killing of the young officers prompted Mayor Adams to declare "it is our city against the killers."

DiGiacomo, the union leader, wrote that Harper's video was no run-of-the-mill social media post.

"The individual involved has a history of threatening violence against police officers," DiGiacomo wrote. "We need federal assistance now to stop a possible terrorist incident. The threat is real. The time for action is now."

Members of the 32nd Precinct salute as the body of NYPD Officer Wilbert Mora is transferred from an NYPD ambulance to the Riverdale Funeral Home in Inwood last week.
